our agreements with two distinguished sub suppliers. In this regard, we will start rendering services complementary to the logistics process such as warehousing and distribution for our customers in need of transporting dangerous cargo in 2014. On the other hand, partial delivery is included in our privileged investment plans. We, as Albatrans, provide air partial services to more than 60 freight forwarder companies, and foresee that we will show a rapid growth in this field. With a new agreement, that we will sign in the next weeks, we will start providing partial maritime delivery services from Ningbo, Shenzhen and Busan ports as a first step. Thereafter, we are planning to establish a similar delivery network for other major ports in time”.

Gümüřhan says that they provide flexible delivery services that comply with the customer needs with door-to-door turn-key projects within the field of project transportation. TURKEY IS NOMINATED TO BE A HUB PORT COUNTRY

Gökhan Gümüřhan, the Sea Cargo Manager of Albatrans, has evaluated the future of the sea transportation and said that when the 3 major port projects run by the state as well as the projects run by the private sector are completed, it is inevitable for Turkey to become a hub port company. Underlining that only with such investments, the Turkish ports would gain an additional capacity of 30 million TEU, and the cargo transports carried out through Egypt, Greece, Malta, Spain and Italy would greatly shift to the Turkish ports, Gümüřhan continues as follows:

“It is expected that Turkey becomes a hub port country especially for the Black Sea, Eastern Europe, North Africa and Arabian Peninsula. That the ships of large scales can approach the docks, which is significantly important of the Far Eastern traffic in terms of the cost, and that the freight and terminal costs will greatly go down in this competitive environment because of the variety of additional services to arise from the consequence of such investments give a rise to major investment opportunities both for our country and our company under the light of such developments. Albatrans to celebrate its 25th anniversary in 2023 aims to be the most important national star of the sector.”

Gümüřhan says: “We can say that in 2014 we will do better than we did in 2013, and achieve our goals. Our goal is to maintain our strategy of growing in double digits this year, as in the previous years, by providing our customers with proactive logistics solutions.”
